We have made a vow to ourselves not to be caught bragging, but to trust to the inevitable revelation of facts to place us right before | the whole injury sustained. the community; yet we feel called upon to say to the business men of Washington, who do not advertise in the Telegraph, that they stand in their own light by not doing so. It is among the people, it is read by them, and it is supported by them-the very people to whom all persons of business should address themselves.

THE PRESIDENT'S GARDENS.

The most interesting piece of rurality we find in Washington is about the President's house. It is truly delightful for one who has been accustomed to the sweets of country life, to take a stroll in a sweet Spring morning or evening to that delightful spot. He meets old friends there. A large majority of the trees and shrubbery are natives. There the lovely sweet-brier, the fragrant crab, the majestic elm, the albino sycamore, the white pine, hemlock and red-bud may be seen. In walking among them, were it not for the eternal rattle of the carriages on the Avenue, one might well fancy himself far away from the giddy crowd and all its frivolities. There little birds are singing and flying about and building their nests, happy as the tenants of the forest wild-no Vandal to invade their quiet retreat; and vagrant bees fly there to sip honey from Uncle Sam's sweet flowers, and bear it away across the broad Potomac, or to their hives in the suburbs of the city. Cows are quietly grazing, too; and the unharnessed horse rolls himself on the grass, and shakes his sides in true democratic freedom.

A foreigner in visiting the Presidential mansion must be amazed at the total absence of guards. No iron-clad Swiss wheel around that house; no insulting soldiery scowl on you as you pass. Every thing has the air of confidence. We feel that the head of our nation is but a citizen elevated for his virtues to the highest office in the world. His power is our power. He is our servant, and at the proper time his acts will pass under national review; and he must put off the robes of office to become again a mere citizen.

There is every thing about the place to purify the heart and elevate the feelings-there is the beauty of art and the simplicity of nature.

How pleasant must it be to one who has reached the place of head of this mighty nation, by virtue and a useful and patriotic life, to enjoy the quiet of those lovely walks, there to hold converse with wife and child and friend, and in the temporary relaxation from public cares to reflect on the virtues of the mighty dead who have been its inhabitants, and render grateful homage to the kind Previdence who has blessed us as never nation was blessed! From the door of this mansion he can gaze on the monument to virtue and greatness, now rising on the margin of our levely Potomac, and learn to practise the great truth that after all there is nothing so influential as sincerity and honesty. To whatever elevation cunning and craft and a crooked policy may attain, he who would acquire true glory, who would establish himself in the hearts of a pure people, who would leave a name which will influence those who shall come after him, must forget self, and labor sincerely and truly for his country's good. Long may our nation be blessed with such a ruler!

What kind of an example are we setting in this 'high place in desecrating God's holy day, by 'this work brought on by ourselves, in consequence of talking instead of acting during a long session? We desecrate the Lord's day by unnecessary secular business, and in the most public and authoritative manner. This is throwing contempt on that holy day, from per one extremity of the Union to the other, so far 'as our example can go. We ought to furnish 'a better example, and I, for one, will never sit on that day in time of peace. I do not say I 'will never do it in time of war, if necessary; 'but I will never do it in time of peace-nor 'willingly at any time. That is my view of the

TO-DAY.

This is a fine, beautiful, sunny spring day; and the ladies and the zephyrs and the birds are all in motion. The recent deluge quieted the dust, but excited the budding trees and the flowers, and, as a probable consequence, the imagination of jejune poets. It proved a damper to many of our builders; but they are fast forgetting it, and rising upward like young broomcorn after a shower.

THE EXILES OF HUNGARY.

In his recently published letter to the representative of the United States Government, at Constantinople, the Secretary of State uses the following eloquent and heart-touching lan-

"For their attempt at independence they have most dearly paid; and now, broken in fortune and in heart, without home or country: a band of exiles, whose only future is a tearful remembrance of the past, whose only request is to spend their remaining days in obscure industry—they wait the permission of his imperial majesty to remove themselves, and all that may remain to them, across the ocean, to the uncultivated regions of America, and leave forever a continent which to them has become more gloomy than the wilderness, more lone and dreary than the desert."

May a warm and hearty reception await them on our shores. Let there be no laudation, no idolizing, no holiday glorifyings; but let warm hearts and kind offices convince the noble Kosouth and his compatriots that ours is a sincere welcome, and that we are sure of realizing, in the defyers of tyranny and intolerance in Europe, the firm and steadfast friends of American freedom.
